Note describing further effects of the implementation of Security Council resolution 748 (1992) on the training sector

The implementation of Security Council resolution 748 (1992) has had a negative impact on the activities of the training sector, details of which have already been provided in document S/24629, dated 8 October 1992. In addition, implementation of the aforesaid resolution has had further effects on the sector, as follows:

1. The training sector relies on the services of a large number of foreign instructors, and the implementation of the resolution has affected the performance of these foreign experts. They cannot enjoy their leave because it is hard for them to return to their home countries given the difficulties involved in transport by way of one of the neighbouring States. They therefore have to forego a portion of their leave balance and financial savings.

2. It is hard to make use of training programmes abroad, particularly those arranged with Arab, regional and international agencies and institutions, because of the late arrival of correspondence and replies, as well as of the difficulty of travelling to take part in such programmes.

3. It is hard to apply the general training plan for employees of different sectors, particularly with respect to overseas training, as a result of problems in acquiring entry visas and - because of travel difficulties - obtaining the services of instructors to fill gaps at training centres. It is also hard to keep track of problems encountered by Libyan Arab trainees abroad, due to the lack of means for the rapid transmission of supervisory reports.

4. It is difficult to execute the minutes of training agreements concluded with fraternal and friendly countries in view of the unavailability or frequent interruption of means of communication.

5. Numerous projects have been halted because of the departure of many workers and of the difficulty in obtaining replacements without complications.

6. The standard of services at certain vital facilities has deteriorated as a result of the shortage of specialized workers, some having departed and others being unable to return.

7. The training sector is unable to fulfil its obligations in terms of cooperation under agreements concluded with other parties. These agreements cover the utilization and exchange of administrative expertise and the exchange of documents, data and statistics concerning the labour market which used to be received periodically from the agencies, institutions and organizations concerned.

8. Some foreign employees have used resolution 748 (1992) as a means of exerting pressure to increase their salaries and benefits: they threaten to resign from their posts if their demands are not met.
